

Fats in Foods: How Much for Kids?

Is ice cream okay for kids? How about fried chicken nuggets, or fries? You're smart to wonder about higher-fat foods for kids. Here's the scoop.

Your child needs some fat from food.

Trying to cut way back on fat may seem like a good idea. But your child needs some fat to be healthy:

- for energy to play, learn, and grow.
- to grow properly.
- to use vitamins from food.
- to add flavor to foods.

Most food energy should come from grain products (such as bread, pasta, and rice), vegetables, fruits, low-fat dairy foods, and beans, lean meat and poultry, fish, eggs or nuts. Be careful with nuts. They may cause choking in 2 to 3 year olds.

Be flexible!

It's okay to eat foods with more fat sometimes. Enjoy a small bowl of ice cream or small order of fries occasionally. Then choose foods with less saturated fat for the next meal or the next day.

Eating less saturated fat is good family advice.

Once your child turns two, learning a habit of low-fat eating is healthful. If family meals and snacks have less fat, your child will learn that way, too.

Choose to limit foods with saturated fat. Eating a lot of saturated fat increases the chance of heart disease later in your lives. Saturated fats are solid at room temperature. Butter, stick margarine, and fat in meat are examples.

Eating lots of any fat, saturated or not, can add up to too many calories. Weight gain over time may lead to diabetes at an early age. Choose mostly lean and low-fat foods to help your child and you keep your healthy weight.

Do you have an infant or toddler under age two? If so, low-fat eating isn't advised before age two. Little ones need more fat for brain development.
